

Social impact entrepreneurs: American Heart Association looking to fund Food Access Solutions in Chicago

- Bernard J. Tyson Impact Fund will invest in community-led social and economic solutions to improve food insecurity in under-resourced populations
- Seeking expressions of interest in Chicago communities

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

CHICAGO, November 19, 2020 — The American Heart Association (AHA), the world's leading nonprofit organization focused on heart and brain health for all, today announced more than $4.5 million available in social impact funding from the Association's Bernard J. Tyson Impact Fund. Businesses and nonprofits that are working to sustainably address food insecurity for residents in Chicago are encouraged to submit expressions of interest.

The nationwide fund is focused on supporting evidence-based, community-driven entrepreneurial solutions that address food insecurity by increasing access to affordable and healthy food. Expressions of interest may be submitted at <https://heart-impactfund.fluxx.io/> through December 11.

A virtual informational "town hall" event will also be offered where community members will discuss the challenges and opportunities to addressing food insecurity with American Heart Association staff to ensure funds are distributed to areas of greatest need and impact.

"Racial inequalities have a dire impact on the health and lifespan of people of color," said Lisa Hinton, Metro Chicago Executive Director at the American Heart Association. "Through the Bernard J. Tyson Impact Fund, social entrepreneurs will be able to accelerate the development of sustainable community-based solutions to make a meaningful, measurable impact on food insecurity and nutrition here in Chicago. And those entrepreneurs will gain access to immediate and substantial funding to help scale their businesses quickly, making a positive financial impact on their communities."

Since its launch in June 2020, the Bernard J. Tyson Impact Fund has supported 11 social entrepreneurs and nonprofits in New York, San Francisco and Oakland, Calif. The fund honors the late Bernard J. Tyson, long-time American Heart Association volunteer and former Kaiser Permanente CEO. Tyson worked tirelessly to overcome structural and systemic barriers to support social justice and equitable health for all.

Facts About Food Insecurity:

- About half of deaths from heart disease, stroke and type 2 diabetes in the U.S. is linked to a poor diet.¹
- About 40 million Americans live in households that don't always have enough food for everyone in the family.²
- Working-age adults who often go without enough food are at least 40% more likely to suffer from long-term health problems, according to a study for the U.S. Department of Agriculture.³
- Children who face food insecurity experience gaps in cognitive development and school achievement.⁴
